

Fix or Replace

SIGNS TO REPLACE

Your Air Conditioner

When you're experiencing issues with your air conditioner in Conroe TX, you may be wondering if it's best to fix or replace it. We're going to share with you some key signs that signal that it's time to replace your air conditioner with a new one.

AGE

If your existing air conditioner is over 10 years old, it's time to replace it. Out-dated air conditioners use toxic refrigerants and are less efficient than more modern options. In addition, R-22 system parts are difficult to find and sometimes no longer available.

COST

It's a general rule of thumb to replace your air conditioning system if the cost of a repair is more than 25% of the total new air conditioning installation price. Air conditioning replacement financing can be a great way to help cover the cost of a new system when you're dealing with an unexpected breakdown.

SIZE

It's not uncommon for homeowners to do renovations and upgrades to their homes over time. If the best AC contractor has noticed that your existing air conditioning system is undersized for your home, it's best to think about replacing it. Not only will a new system help to keep your home more comfortable for your family, but it will likely cost less to run since it won't be running as often as your old, undersized unit.

REPAIR FREQUENCY

Apart from annual maintenance, your air conditioning system shouldn't need any professional repairs on a regular basis. If you've had more than two repairs in the last five years, it's time to consider upgrading to a new system. Avoid falling victim to frequent repairs that constantly nickel and dime you out of money.
